Dear Friends of CIS,

“A New World View” by Rev. Christine Emmerling

While working at my computer station I often gaze out a window. The view I’ve had is a tall fence, and a bit of sky above the house behind us. Recently I purchased a large metal yellow petalled flower with a green center and four colorful hummingbirds. A few days ago, a hummingbird came to check the flower out. Finding it fake quickly turned around and flew away. Nobody likes to be tricked.

For years the government has been debunking the unusual flying objects people have sighted and attaching a stigma to witnesses. At long last it has come out as not something to ridicule but is being taken seriously by government and scientists. It seems anything out of the ordinary is debunked or called evil until some authority agrees. Back in the mid-1960s I first practiced meditation while traditional churches at the time labeled it evil or of the devil. By the 1980s there were medical studies that verified the benefits of meditation. Today meditation is quite acceptable, and even many businesses encourage their employees to have a meditation practice.

Divine Science has always been on the fringe of religion and science; meaning a forerunner. Malinda Cramer and Nona Brooks with their own spiritual healings and the healings of others. Teaching to change our beliefs around a new kind of God, one that is both invisible and visible, everywhere present Spirit that is all good, all knowledge, all powerful and expressing as all creation. In this new understanding spiritual healing takes place. Not because there is something material to heal, but that we give up our belief in a material world for a world of Spirit Substance. The belief of illness and disease is lifted from consciousness. As long as we believe in a material world, we are tricking ourself into accepting a world of sin, lack, illness and death.

Once scientists change their approach to physics, a whole new world will be revealed. We will all know that we live in a multidimensional conscious universe, and even our visible bodies being multidimensional consciousness. Hot off the press “Scientists use 4D to reach metamaterial breakthrough. 'Popular Mechanics' reports that the fourth dimension is helping scientists to reach some sci-fi level breakthroughs in the development of metamaterials. Using advanced mathematics and light, researchers are able to develop ‘synthetic dimensions’ beyond the three dimensions we normally perceive.” It won’t be long for a whole new paradigm!

“A Larger View” by Rev. Mark Stuefloten

September, for many of us, brings our summer to a close. There are still many warm, wonderful days ahead for us here in California. I often enjoy the beaches in Santa Cruz later in September. Less traffic and fewer people mean it’s easier to get a seat in one of my favorite restaurants on the wharf. I have been coming to some of these restaurants on the wharf since back when I was in elementary school with my parents. My mother always wanted a window seat so she could watch the boats come and go while she dined.

My mother's parents lived high on a hillside in Santa Barbara. They had a wide window in their living room, almost the length of the whole room. I would look out that window toward the ocean. I had an uncle who had a fishing boat and during the day I would try to see his boat. At night I looked out at the stars.

My dad was a carpenter. When he built our first home in San Jose, California, he put a large window in our living room like my grandparents had. Our view was of our neighborhood and the rolling green hills. When we are feeling defeated, feeling lack, feeling limited in what we can accomplish because of some problem, we need a larger view. We have to look out through our larger life window.

We Always have that larger mental window view available to us to help us see all of the possibilities for moving any mountain that stands in our way. Problems are opportunities for growth. Our mistakes are proof that we are working in the human condition, and when we make amends for our mistakes, we are demonstrating our divine nature.

Open up to your wider view of life. Affirm the blessings in your life and the good in others. Thank your creator for the life you have and the people in it. God's presence is with you. All of nature is supporting you. We live in a friendly universe and the power for the greater good of all is actively seeking good for individuals in all walks of life.
